"Of course, an organized system for the holding up of women is a mean thing, but it is not criminal. The practice which had grown up and been perfected in the "Tenderloin" and a few other station houses where the bulk of such arrests were made afforded a tremendous opportunity of making rain and the business which was great, fell into the hands of a few bondsmen."

LEAPED INTO RIVER

Some of His Clothing Found and Wife Has Become Hysterical.

If alive, John J. Kelly of No. 282 Brook avenue, the Bronx, should communicate with his wife and three children at once. Mrs. Kelly is prostrated at her home with the constant attention of two physicians necessary to prevent her from self harm in her hysteria. Mrs. Kelly was working in the kitchen of her home about noon when Policeman Rosencranz, of the Alexander avenue station, entered the apartment, with a long, black overcoat, a small, black coat and a black derby. In the pocket of the smaller coat were two fron keys, of the smaller coat were two fron keys, a cheap cigar cutter and a piece of paper, reading: "John J. Keily, No. 282 Brook avenue."

"Do these things belong to your husband?" asked Policeman Rosencranz.
Mrs. Kelly examined the property closely and then stated that the coats looked like the ones her husband wore when he left the house at 9 o'clock, but she was sure he wore a black cap instead of the derby, which was almost new.

stead of the derby, which was almost new.

The woman was then told that the coats were found near the north approach of the Willis avenue bridge, at Southern Boulevard, and that R was feared that the owner had jumped into the Harlem River.

Mr4. Kelly at once fainted. When she revived the policeman learned that he revived the policeman learned that here husband had been without work three weeks. He is a stationary fireman He was cheerful when he departed, she said, kissing his three children as he went out.

"And is that why he kissed them?" she asked.

The police are making a search for Kelly or his body.
